It contained twelve houses in 1894, with a population of forty-six persons. The revenue paid was four annas per household, and the occupation of the people was paddy cultivation and trading. They owned three bullocks and thirteen buffaloes. The price of paddy was twelve annas the basket. TA ONG MU.--Latitude 190 56; longitude 970 38. Altitude, eight hundred feet.--A ferry on the Salween river, half way between the Hwe Long Wai and the Hwe Mu. This is the ferry for travellers to Mong Maii from Sa Lawng or Kadugyi. There are usually two small boats here. Below the ferry the Salween narrows considerably and just above the Hwe Long Wai junction it is only seventy-five yards wide in the dry season. TA PA.--A ferry on the Salween river in the Northern Shan States. Very few caravans use this route. A few mules and bullocks cross in January and February; but there are said to be not more than about twenty of each yearly. It is used as a communication between villages on the banks and by people from Ko Kang coming to Mong Si bazaar. The Salween at the ferry flows in a succession of long reaches and rapids, the reach at the ferry being about half-a-mile in length. It is about one hundred and thirty yards broad and flows at the rate of one-and-a-half to two miles an hour. The banks are high, steep, and jungle-covered, bamboos being plentiful on both banks, but not of great size. The flood-rise in the rains is from thirty-five to forty feet. The ferry service is maintained by one dug-out, capable in good condition of transporting seven mule loads at a time. The passage takes about three minutes. It is worked by men from Ta Hsen village, five of whom are on duty for ...
