Excerpt: ... ftir, and a buftle, never faw the like. Faith, I believe yours lay fome days at the poftoffice, and that it came before my eighteenth went, but that I did not expect it, and I hardly ever go there. Well, and fo you think Ill anfwer this letter now; no faith, and fo I wont. Ill make you wait, young women; but Ill enquire immediately about poor Dingleys exchequer trangum. What, is that Vedel again a foldier? Was he broke? Ill put it in Ben Tookes hand. I hope Vedtl could not fell it.--At night. Vfdel, Vedel, poh, pox, I think it is Vedeau; aye, Vedeau) now I have it; let me fee, do you name him in yours? Yes, Mr. John Vedeau is the brother; but where does this brother live; Ill enquire. This was a faft-day for the publick; fo I dined late with fir Matthew Dudley, whom I have not been with a great while. He is one of thofe that mull lofe his employment whenever the great fhake comes; and I cant contribute to keep him in, though I have dropt words in his favour to the miniftry; but he has been too violent a Whig and friend to the lord-treafurer-f-, to ftay in. Tis odd to think how long they let thofe people keep their places; but the reafon is, they have not enough to fatisfy all expecters, and fo they keep them all in hopes, He muft mean an exchequer tally.. -. Earl of hopes, that they may be good boys in the mean time; and thus the old ones hold in flill. The comptroller told me, that there are eight people expecl: his (raff. I walked after dinner to-day round the Park. What, do I write politicks to little young women? Hold your tongue, aki go to your deans. 29. Morning. If this be a fine day I will walk into the city, and fee Charles Barnards library. What care I for your letter, your faucy A7. 12? I will fay nothing to it yet: faith, I believ...
